Stream on Apple Music The first new material from famed British rockers The Stone Roses in two decades. All For One made massive waves when it landed on the internet earlier this week. Whether you're Arabic or African, music is the universal tongue. A phenomenon on its own terms Released as a single on January 17, 2000, four months after its initial appearance on Brand New Day, "Desert Rose"'s across-the-board appeal yielded success across the globe, with the song entering the Top 20 in the UK and scoring Top 10 positions in numerous territories. Put it on, fire up the grill, and pop a tall boy: Summer is (almost) here. Listen to the best of Sting on Apple Music and Spotify. A global smash that undoubtedly contributed to the multi-platinum success of its parent album, Brand New Day, the song's beguiling, yet stylistically elusive qualities were widely praised, though Sting himself was less comfortable with critics referring to it as his take on "world music." Defying categorization "I'd rather say that my ambition is to defy the titles that people make for you," Sting reflected in a 1999 interview. Download on iTunes Garage-y beach pop may be a slowly-receding trend in the music world these days, but every once in awhile a track like Skateboarding Girl comes along to convince us that the genre shouldn't disappear so quickly. Download on iTunes Drivers is an interesting bit of pop music which mixes contemporary electronic beats with warm vintage tones to create an extremely pleasant anthem. After seeing Mami perform at Paris' Bercy Arena with an orchestra and legendary prog-rock guitarist Steve Hillage, the singer-songwriter was keen to collaborate with the Algerian performer possessed of a "swooping voice that just mesmerizes." Encouraged to improvise in Arabic, Cheb Mami created a remarkable counterpoint to the vocal melody Sting had already devised. But don't worry, we're going to save you the hassle. Sting performed it for an audience of millions during the 2001 Super Bowl pregame show, while the song's striking music video (shot in California's Mojave Desert and featuring Sting being driven in a Jaguar S-Type by a masked female chauffeur) led to Jaguar featuring the video in their TV adverts during 2000. The song's ability to suit almost any mood or match the need of any occasion lived up to Billboard's assertion that "Desert Rose" was a "royal flush." They praised Sting's "ability to ever expand his vision" while remaining "a voice of sanity and sophistication" in the modern era. Different languages, a similar emotion For his part, Sting was smitten by Cheb Mami's music during the period leading up to the recording of Brand New Day. His subsequent performance floored all concerned. In the US, "Desert Rose" also became a phenomenon on its own terms. We listen to some of the most hyped and interesting songs each week, and tell you which are worthy of your precious listening time. "I don't do world music or reggae. I do whatever I do. But it's true that 'Desert Rose' has a definite Arabic, North African flavor." The song's backing track came from Sting and his band simply jamming ideas, which Sting described as "a song about longing, a kind of Sufi [Islam] idea - romantic love as an analog for the greater love of God." Ultimately, though, "Desert Rose"'s tangibly North African feel was realized through an inspired collaboration with Cheb Mami, a proponent of the Algerian folk music style known as Rai. Download on iTunes That's it for now, but check back every week for more new tunes to stream! Editors' Recommendations Alluring and sensual, Sting's 2000 hit "Desert Rose" represents a high-water mark in the artist's illustrious career. Given how good this single is (its lacking in the lyrics department notwithstanding), we can't wait to hear other new material from the band, who have reportedly been holed up in the studio for some time. "But the lyric he improvised was almost the same as mine - it had to do with lost love and longing - which goes to show how the music suggested the exact same emotion to us individually. Download on iTunes There's some definite Paul McCartney influence in the latest single from British songwriter Steve Gunn, and we sure aren't complaining. For longtime Sting fans, however, that's just par for the course. In effect, a potent form of African folk-blues with origins reputedly dating back to the early 20th Century, Rai initially appealed to young people seeking to modernize traditional Islamic values and attitudes, but it enjoyed global recognition during the late 80s. It became a fixture of Sting's live set during the world tour in support of Brand New Day and - as Victor Calderone's contemporaneous techno remix and the new, electronica-tinged version from Sting's My Songs album demonstrate - this beguiling song is no slouch on the dancefloor either. It's a modern classic of the highest order, the sort of gem which doesn't surface on streaming-era speakers nearly as often as it should. One of the most surprising (and successful) collaborations to appear on Chance the Rapper's new mixtape Coloring Book this week was No Problem, a trap-influenced cut which featured verses from Lil Wayne and 2 Chainz. It's a track which showcases everything fans have always loved about the '90s rockers: a driving beat, mellow vocal stylings, and excellent tones all around. A hip little good-time jam, this sneak attack proves why creators Sick Sad World deserve every drop of hype they have earned so far — and maybe a good bit more. Created by 22-year-old Los Angeles resident Nick Leng, who spent his youth in South Africa, the song has an international mystique: It's the kind of thing you could easily convince someone was made for a European dance hall, rather than a hipster bar in Silver Lake. "The amazing thing is, he didn't understand a word I was singing," Sting revealed. It's too much for just your two ears to handle. It's an unusual direction for Chance, who has a penchant for more gentle rap cuts, but in this case we aren't complaining.
